Customer Connection

Gadsden Elementary School District

Altura delivered the power of convergence to Gadsden Elementary School District.

Gadsden Elementary School District had an 80 switch network with over 4700 ports. Altura integrated a wired and wireless network and designed, implemented, and supported their core data network, and IP telephony along with video conferencing and video distribution. This required a true convergence solutions engineering team.

"We were looking for efficient ways to provide distance learning capabilities to bring our homebound students into the classroom environment and to also provide live broadcast television and announcement distribution throughout our School District, so we looked to our convergence partner Altura for a solution. Altura was fantastic in that they not only came in and designed a Video Conferencing and Data Sharing solution for our homebound students but they also recommended an IP Video Distribution solution to provide live distribution and recording of classroom instructor sessions which also enables us to broadcast live television and announcements to any traditional television and almost any IP devise. It has saved our District in having to send teachers to the homebound students and has brought the children into the classroom to experience the class environment. The IP Video Distribution has saved us time in allowing us to do district wide and school wide announcements and education sessions from any location in the District. The solutions have provided an expanded curriculum to students on and off campus that they can access on almost any IP devise."
